Burning Questions?
by Tracy Jeanne Rosenthal

Gauss PDF, 2015
© Tracy Jeanne Rosenthal

*So your name is Tracy?
So your question, Tracy?
Are you out there looking?*

This text is research for a forthcoming Salon.com expose.

This text is the Belgian government's PSA to warn you about how much information you share online.

This text is the result of three months of online psychic interventions.

This text was written by Jowanda6 days before I spoke to her on Oranum.com.

I was looking up the meaning of a tarot card. The Devil. Around Los Angeles, a tarot deck is an inevitability. The Devil didn't seem like one. I pulled three cards from three decks in three weeks. It was the Devil every time. Bondage is voluntary, the Devil tells us, apparently. Fear, addiction, attachment, resentment, envy—we blame the Devil, but these belong to us. It's true: I was having a loathsome time with something about my "me." Same with the "us" I was half of. The Devil says it's nobody's fault but mine. Better get a second opinion. Or a twenty-second opinion.

Biddytarot.com compares true friendship to that shared by the four cardboard creatures of Sex and the City. They also say the best cure for the Devil is energy within. Instead, I am drawn to the advertisement their advice is designed around. Burning Questions?

*So your name is Tracy?
So your question, Tracy?
Are you out there looking?*

Oranum.com's advertising has a glitch. Press play, and the jersey-clad mom opens her mouth, but the sound comes from somewhere else. Un-synched. Like a bad ventriloquist dummy. A channel with a weak signal. Visually, the data is compelling. Is that a green screen? Is that the Giants? Is this your day job? Acoustically, it's a trip. Somewhere, in another window, a reading is taking place: "I feel your concern for your family now. You feel that they rely on you, that they need to rely on you." The mom nods at the wrong moments. Her lips form letters at all the wrong times. "LIVE" the advertisement claims. Should I consider it simulcast? Then the voice from elsewhere asks, too calmly:

*So your name is Tracy?
So your question, Tracy?
Are you out there looking?*

Remember, advertisements are portals to elsewhere.

This time, I close the window. I do not wish to pay the toll.

When you buy credits on Oranum.com, payment is delivered to Duodecad IT Services Luxembourg S.a r.l, a subsidiary company of Docler Holding. Duodecad IT Services Luxembourg S.a r.l is a trademarked video streaming technology. The company could just as easily supply the infrastructure for conference calls or camgirls. And, in fact, they do. Webcam services are perfect emblems of the experience economy, in which commodities are not content but platforms for content's production, in which laborers make feelings rather than things. Does it just so happen that Oranum.com is Duodecad IT Services' most profitable enterprise?

The opposite of paranoia, pronoia is, in John Perry Barlow's words, a "suspicion the Universe is a conspiracy on your behalf." John Perry Barlow is a cyberlibertarian and a former Grateful Dead lyricist, whose career catapult from the counterculture to cyber-activism performs the neoliberal as that freaky confluence of new age, technophilia, and an anti-corporate individualism indistinguishable from hedonism. Wired Magazine used "pronoia" in a 1994 rhapsody for the then-current pro-tech remix of hippies, the zippies, self-described as "Zen-inspired professional pagans," who've "balanced their hemispheres to achieve a fusion of the technological and the spiritual." Wired advertises: "Zippiedom has become a deliberately broad church: It embraces the multinational businessman taking yoga classes as well as the hippie couple making candles to sell at festivals, the New Age traveler with a PC running off his bus's dynamo and the raver looking for a more meaningful buzz than ecstasy."

As Eve Kosofsky Sedgwick reminds us, paranoia is a preemptive strike: anything awful you can do to me, I can do to myself first.

It's 2-for-1 Wednesdays with StarFall2014 and Kawaii90. The two split an hour hosting a demo together. You ask a question, one pulls a card, the other "tunes in," and they give you a five-minute answer, collaborating on the details. Cozy in their fresh-out-of-high-school Alt, StarFall2014 has pink hair, splotchy red skin, and fifty extra pounds; Kawaii90 has purple streaks and bags under her eyes. They are backlit in front of a puffy suede loveseat, beige walls, and a bad lamp. The first demo is for bluetig. bluetig and I have shared a demo-hopping schedule this afternoon. bluetig always asks the same question: will her relationship with her dance teacher progress into something romantic? Psychic SusanHeart says it's just professional. COUTESSSTARELLA says November. StarFall2014 and Kawaii90 say it's possible but it may not end as she hopes. I never ask a thing, just capture it all with Screen Record.

I buy a private reading. FireRaven is listening to “Girls Just Wanna Have Fun,” tossing her hair back and forth under a red baseball hat. She has a crystal lamp and a candle burning beside her. Wherever she is, it’s night. Or at least, it’s dark. Thinking about it now, I’m sure I picked her because the racist in me is glad she isn’t white—exoticism as racism’s perverse inverse. There, in the humor I find in the white psychics, is a Hollywood-headed assignment of authentic mysticism based on race. That I similarly ignore the many male psychics is lost on me for months.

When FireRaven and I begin, I am only thinking about the tinny, crackling song from my computer speakers. I assume she’ll turn it off and speak to me directly, like the others. She doesn’t. Instead, we chat in the text window while Cindi Lauper blares.

I had written the reading off as chatroom chat. Then, I realized the recording I made of those fifteen minutes always crashes Quicktime. I  W. I close. I Quit. I Force Quit. The video just keeps playing. The psychic’s mouth keeps articulating silently. The chat continues to scroll.

Perhaps Oranum.com is more honest archive of interiors than Airbnb (#NoFilter). Oranum.com provides its psychics with the option to project their silhouette in front of a series of backdrops, which include the pyramids undergoing a planetary event and an Avatar-themed forest. But many opt for their own sheets or textiles, chalkboard paint with love-themed inspiration—“heart, Being, kiss.” But most sit with bare white walls before busted Venetians, the aesthetics of the psychic implied with occasional candle, or statue of the Buddha. Stars are the most popular motif. My favorite was a handmade astrological chart, with the names of all the signs home-office printed in Droid Sans.

As a registered member who has purchased a credit pack, you have access to every psychic's Livefeed, for as long as you'd like to look at it, and as long as they're there. You can see them, but they can't see you. They are alerted to your presence, often greeting you by username. You can type a response into the chat window, or you can stare. You can watch IssisMedium fix her hair, using the camera as a mirror. Watch boredom pass over Anna Simmone's face, her cleavage echoed by the series of crystal balls on her desk. Watch dreamsworld tinker on her computer in a cherry wood bed.

I tell Jowanda6 I like her beehive. Her graying hair is teased into a high up-do. She's wearing black plastic frames, a red lipstick that tinges purple, and a denim shirt, sitting in front of a wall papered with 50s stars. I am grateful for her aesthetic, I later realize, believing it must mark other things we share. But her lips curl as she reads my message. Her eyes roll. Is it not okay, I wonder, to comment on the way a psychic looks? Is it that I've called out a black woman's hair? Sorry, I type, just really into yr style! -- So many unhip psychics. Guest please register she responds to an apparent lurker, ignoring me. It doesn't occur to me that without a face, I could be jerking off onto my keys. It doesn't occur to me that she can sense I am recording.

She faces away from the screen, head wrapping over her shoulder, shoulders tensing, searching the room, singing along to a song I can't hear, or telling herself I'll leave soon. Can I ask you a question? I ask, I don't know why. She continues to ignore me.

unicorn212: can I just ask you what a black scrying mirror is?
unicorn212: sorry I was wack – I just meant u look like a person I could ta unicorn212: lk to unicorn212: talk
unicorn212: r u getting bad vibes from me?
unicorn212: really sorry for sending you bad vibes

I don't return to Oranum.com until 6 months later. I am in St. Louis on a residency without a project or a purpose. I was given a key to an apartment on Cherokee St. and another key to an art space. Between the two is Fortune Teller Bar. Clairvoyance: Wednesday - Saturday 7pm - 10pm. I resolve to ask the reader what to work on. On the way home, I notice a group of dressed up freaks. They are shooting a commercial for the color blue, do I want to join? I did. It turns out one of them had just made Internet friends, for little reason, with my new boo. A conversation had emerged over those new emoji. She'd already seen me, through his photos.

Is there a project you haven't thought about in a while, but might need attention? Curtis asks me, looking at the Moon (the Devil's hangover), Wheel of Fortune (chance, change, cycles), both the Seven and Eight of Pentacles (creative labor), and the Two of Cups (The Lovers but light). The answer is many. Given the context, I begin with online psychics. Are you writing about Oranum? For years, Curtis was a psychic on Oranum.com. His username, still searchable, is LibraMoon.

The best money was in e-mail readings, Curtis tells me. If he could quickly meet the 2,000 character minimum—fucking long—he'd make $5 in a few minutes. But he couldn't make it fast enough. Once he was visiting another room and watched the psychic's cat knock over her camera. It revealed dozens of taped open tarot books, and inspirational quotes, which she was obviously just repeating. He knew some psychics were just Googling card meanings, or random readings, and saying whatever came up. He gave up. He had a friend, a woman, who left Oranum before he did. She left for other reasons. People tried to jerk off in front of her, harassed her. Did you see a lot of people ask for energy healing? Or chakra cleansing? Basically, a hot girl gets topless and sits there. He makes scare quotes. Cleansing your aura.

Curtis doesn't often tell his clients, but he's a libertarian. He works as the treasurer of the city's Republican party, where he doesn't tell his co-workers he's a Pagan. I ask him how being a psychic squares with his politics. He quotes Aleister Crowley's Philosophy of Thelema, "Do what thou wilt shall be the whole of the Law"—the kind of individualist credo which proves politics is organized on a wheel rather than a line. Fear no gods, nor men. Maximize human freedom. I get too many New Age-y homo types to be loud about it. I mean nature's cool, man, but I'm not Green or anything. Have you heard of Soviet Subversion?

Soviet subversion is conspiracy theory about a Cold War long-game to decrease America's population and create internal strife. Are you a Truther? I ask him. Sometimes you have to break a few eggs. Have you ever done a reading about it? He draws three cards:

1. Seven of Cups (inability to distinguish between realities and illusions)
2. Justice (you guessed it)
3. The Emperor (the Government, the Father).

While signed on, Oranum's psychics are in constant conversation with a support team, housed in Amsterdam and Belgium. The team guides the psychics to interact with clients who've purchased a lot of credit and who actually tend to use it—lurker is trade lingo for Oranum's ceaseless parade of voyeurs. The support team encourages the psychics to save their insights for private readings. It also drops them lines from the user's prior questions, to other psychics, even on other days.

This cannot be so deep. If you want much deeper that's why we have private reading. Please if I give reading let that person type let no one else type it will confuse my energy, there will be too much energy and the reading will not be clear. Why this typing? Every time somebody types I get the energy. Energy. Energy. I don't use tarot cards. If you want I can use tarot card, but information is right here. dragonASHES, you want to know what your relationship with him is? You've known him a long time. You were the one who was taking everything on. Balancing the energy. But I sense temper. He inherited this temper from one of his parents. His mom? Okay. Somehow her soul is getting more and more expressed in him. His family is a curse. From outside they are fine. But inside they are very sick. Sick, sick, narcissistic. About his feelings for you, well, if you open the door he will come to you. But you—you don't want it. You play with a dog, he will bite you. It's your business. It's your life. But if you can be patient with me—don't give me bad testimony—if you wait, you will learn he will not conquer his demons. I see that.

Restarting a browser with dozens of tabs, the sound of every flash element blares into my apartment at once. Yes? Hey there. A couple of EGS lectures. Christina Aguilera's "Your Body," her biggest single since "Genie in a Bottle." "Hello Oranum," she says to the video's sponsor, before a femdom killing spree. Uh-huh. Just let me know if you want to go to private. A KPCC spot on high-density development. Fader's latest mixtape. Hello. Yes, it has been awhile. I've happened to reload while Jowanda6 is live, settled into her headphones, unhurriedly greeting the guests in her room. Her hair is a short crystal blue bob. Maybe six months have passed. I linger a moment as Oranum's slogan scrolls beneath, Confused? We have clarity.
